On the sale day, the employees of the Corporation were to be compulsorily transferred to the purchaser and the Corporation abolished. Section 18 of the Housing Loans Insurance Corporation (Sale of Assets and Abolition) Act provided that the Commonwealth would continue to be liable for compensable injuries suffered by Corporation employees before the sale day “to the extent that the Corporation would have been liable if the Corporation Act had not been repealed”. The sale did not take place and a change of policy resulted in the repeal of the 1990 Act by the Housing Loan Insurance Corporation (Transfer of Assets and Abolition) Act 1996 (No 14/1996), assented to on 24 June 1996 - see below.</td>
